SCIENCE
Fox Island and Chesapeake Bay Field Exploration
(lecture, discussion, activity)
NEW! This residential program marks the seventh Chesapeake Bay and watershed field exploration for the Osher Institute. The popularity of these programs lies in the exceptional hands-on opportunities for learning about our fragile environment. We will travel by ferry to the Fox Island Study Center. Built in 1929 as a hunting and fishing lodge, the center is surrounded by the waters of Tangier and Pocomoke Sounds in Virginia. Fox Island’s location, history, and simplicity make it truly magical. Extensive wetlands, underwater grass beds and oyster reefs will be easily explored on foot and by canoe and workboat. Please note these special conditions for this program: Housing is dormitory style and we will prepare, eat and clean up for our meals as a group; conditions of the island are remote and we will practice water conservation techniques including no showers during the program; there is little or no cell phone service, however land phones are available for emergency calls in and out.
Leaders: Chesapeake Bay Foundation Educators
